Controlled release delivery of dexamethasone from polyurethane nanocomposite: in vitro, in vivo, and in silico investigation. Nanoparticles have been investigated for the delivery of the short-acting glucocorticoid dexamethasone (DEX). However, their stability and biodegradability are major obstacles that need to be addressed. The study focuses on the in vitro and in vivo investigation of a novel biodegradable polyurethane nanocomposite (PUNC) as a DEX-delivery vehicle. A facile, bottom-up synthesis method was used to prepare the polyurethane nanocomposite. These were characterized by using several techniques including Fourier-transform infrared spectroscopy, X-ray diffraction, scanning electron microscopy, and transmission electron microscopy. In vitro and in vivo characterizations were performed for PUNC, aqueous and nanoemulsion DEX suspensions, and DEX-in-PLGA polymeric microparticles (PMPs) in order to assess the release profile of DEX from the nanocomposite. A cell viability study was performed in order to determine the cytotoxic effect of DEX-in-PLGA PMPs and DEX-in-PUNC on RAW 264.7 cells. In vitro release showed that DEX-in-PUNC releases DEX much more slowly than DEX-in-PLGA PMPs and DEX-in-aqueous suspension. This could be attributed to the thermal and chemical stability of PUNC. Further, the in vivo studies demonstrated that DEX-in-PUNCs showed a more sustained effect and lower dosing requirement than DEX-in-PLGA PMPs. In silico studies were performed in order to identify the interaction of DEX with the PUNC polymer.
